

Dr Theodoros A. Markopoulos is Assistant Professor at the Department of Chemistry of International Hellenic University (IHU), Greece. He has over twenty years of experience as a scientific employee at the Ministry of Rural Development and Food of the Hellenic Republic and especially at the Regional Center of Plant Protection and Quality Controls of Kavala which is a decentralized service unit of the Ministry. He served as Vice President of one of the largest industrial units that operated in the region in the past. Also, he participated in the European network of “European GMO - free Regions” as a representative of this Region. For the past decade, he has been teaching about food quality and safety at the Greek National Center for Public Administration. Dr Theodoros Markopoulos has over 20 publications (peer-reviewed monographs, papers, conference proceedings). His research interests among others include quality control, food certifications and development of food chemistry, food production and food industry in the European and international environment.